

UMass Lowell
Survey of North Carolina Likely Voters

October 20-26 2020

N=911 North Carolina Likely Voters

This sample has an adjusted margin of error $\pm 4.2\%$

See <http://uml.edu/polls> for full questionnaire/topline results and detailed methodology disclosure.

Survey design and analysis by Joshua J. Dyck, Director and John Cluverius, Associate Director,
Center for Public Opinion, University of Massachusetts Lowell

Do you have a question about this poll? If so, tweet @UML_CPO and we'll get back to you.

HIGHLIGHTS

Trump and Biden still tied in tight North Carolina race

With less than a week to go, President Donald Trump and Former Vice President Joe Biden remain deadlocked support from a large percentage of Democratic voters (59%), leading among Independents (41% to 35%), and also by gaining the support (6%) of Republican identifying crossover voters. Is Cunningham's affair hurting him in the race against Tillis? Asked whether his involvement in an extramarital affair made voters more or less likely to vote for Cunningham, or made no difference, 39% of voters said it made them less likely to vote for Cunningham, while 56% said it made no difference. Most notably, 12% of Democratic likely voters and 38% of pure independents reported that news of the affair made them less likely to vote for Cunningham.

Biden

Likewise, North Carolina likely voters were also asked if their Senators should vote for or against the nomination of Amy Coney Barrett to the Supreme Court. A majority (55%) said that North Carolina's Senators (including Tillis) should vote for Barrett's confirmation.

The Pandemic Election

A central defining issue of the 2020 election campaign has been the coronavirus pandemic and resulting policy response from the government. See 6m4CID 5rati/P <</MC804 (()Tj]3 (r-4a(Se)9

